Dreaming of Prom

by Mady Wilkins

I walked into my room and plopped onto my bed, dropping my backpack to the floor. I landed on a weird bump and rolled off.

I had sat on a teddy bear...and it wasn't mine. I picked it up and went to go see if my siblings had brought it into my room. I picked it up by its arm, but as I grabbed the paw, noise came out. It wasn't just noise though, it was a question. I pushed the paw in and then listened intently.

"Will you go to Prom with me?"

I was so confused. Who had done this?

I looked down at the bear and saw a small paper tied around the neck with a ribbon. I turned the paper over, and there was my friend's name.

So he was the one that had asked me to Prom. Of course I was going to yes, but now came the pressure of figuring out how to do that in some creative way. Why did the boys always have to be creative; why couldn't they just flat out ask me?

Suddenly, the doorbell rang. I flew down the stairs to answer it, but there was no one there when I answered.

I began to step outside, but glancing down I quickly pulled my foot back. Someone had left something at my door, and I had almost crushed it. It was a vase of flowers with a card in it. Another one of my friends had also asked me to Prom.

Now what was I supposed to do?

I went up to my room and began to pace. How was I going to say yes? But more importantly, who was I going to say yes to?

I went to school the next day and walking through the commons, I saw a poster with my name on it. I walked closer to get a better look, and it was yet another one of my guy friends asking me to Prom. Now, I was definitely in for some trouble.

I decided that I would have to tell the first guy yes, it was only polite. So now I had to come up with three creative answers, two ways to say no and one to say yes. I was definitely in for it.

Then, all of a sudden, I woke up, and it was all in my mind.

A few students each day during second period go to teach the mini students here at Westlake, our very own Thundering Tots. These aspiring teachers prepare their own lessons that will build a foundation for these young children for their future education.

Each week has a different theme. This next week's theme is the five senses, with the letter X and number 24. These clever and creative students plan a lesson that will cover 6 fundamental areas of knowledge; reading, writing, art, science, math, and music. As these high school students prepare and teach lessons about shapes and colors they also learn something, how to be patient and caring.
